

The Bell

The Tuckwell
Scholarship at
The Australian
National University
2016 Edition

THE ANNUAL

TheBell

The annual magazine for the Tuckwell Scholarship Program

Australian National University

TUCKWELL
SCHOLARSHIP

The Bell magazine

For those of you who have just picked up The Bell for the first time, you might be wondering why we call it 'The Bell' after all.

This Tuckwell annual magazine looks back on the year that was for our current Scholars, profiling each year group and the enrichment program.

It will eventually also profile our Tuckwell alumni and be their way of staying engaged with the program as they continue on to new adventures and contribute to the Tuckwell vision of giving back to Australia, whether that be through time, talent or treasure.

The name of the magazine was taken from the Tuckwell handbell used in the 'ringing in' ceremony, the centrepiece of the annual Commencement Dinner. Commissioned by Graham and Louise Tuckwell, the Tuckwell Bell was cast by Britain's oldest manufacturing company, the Whitechapel Bell Foundry in London.

The crafting of this handbell from molten metal into sound signifies the transformative impact that the Tuckwell Scholarship program at ANU will have on the lives of the Tuckwell Scholars.

We're excited this year to welcome the natural progression of this magazine's evolution, watching the scholars curate it themselves.

Thank you to everyone who contributed to making 2016 the year that it was.

Here's to the future!

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

GEORGIA LEAK
EDITOR IN CHIEF
2015 SCHOLAR

With 2016 seeing the Tuckwell Scholarship Program grow and diversify with the ringing in of 24 fresh scholars, the introduction of an entirely scholar-led enrichment program and the opening of our new Tuckwell home on Fellows Lane, it feels only natural that this year also marks the beginning of a new era for our very own publication, The Bell. Conceived of and grown by the amazing Tuckwell administration staff, this year The Bell has left the nest — edited by myself, and nearly entirely cultivated, directed and written by scholars.

It was only a little bit over a year ago that a very nervous, Year 12 Georgia sat in front of Graham and Louise, adamantly telling them that the literary sphere and the world of editing and publishing were places she was born to inhabit. The fact that, in just my first year at university, I have been given the opportunity to edit a professional publication is a true testament to the supportive, encouraging and life-transforming nature of the Tuckwell Scholarship Program.

I'm sure all scholars would agree with me in saying that the work that Graham and Louise do, along with the efforts of all of the staff involved in this program, are things that we will never be able to thank them enough for.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

GRAHAM & LOUISE TUCKWELL: REFLECTION ON 2016	2
2014 SCHOLARS	4
2015 SCHOLARS	6
2016 SCHOLARS	8
FIRST YEARS' REFLECTION	10
LETTERS FROM THE ROAD - EXCHANGE & STUDY ABROAD	20
HOME SWEET HOME - SCHOLARS HOUSE	24
FROM THE HEAD OF SCHOLARS HOUSE	26
THE FELLOWS	27
ENGAGEMENT	28
SCHOLAR LIFE	32
ORIENTATION DAY	38
COMMENCEMENT PARENTS LUNCH	40
COMMENCEMENT DINNER	42
TUCKWELL CAMP	44
ACADEMIC DINNER	46
INTERVIEW WEEKEND	48
FROM A PANEL MEMBER'S PERSPECTIVE	50
ENRICHMENT PROGRAM	52
MENTOR PROGRAM	56
THE TUCKWELL GIFT	58
THE 2016 GIFT	59
FROM THE PROGRAM DIRECTOR	60

Graham and Louise photographed in Canberra, July 2016, for The Canberra Times (Photo: Graham Tidy)

REFLECTION ON 2016

GRAHAM AND LOUISE TUCKWELL

This is the time of year when we sit back, take stock and think about the progress that has been made in the Scholarship Program. Although it has now been running for three years, 2016 was very much a year of firsts. Here are some of them:

- Our first scholar graduates! Five of our 2014 Scholars undertook 3-year degrees as part of their study programs so congratulations to them on graduating. Thankfully, they are all staying on to complete further study, as we are not yet ready to say goodbye to anyone.
- Our first Scholars House opened in mid-2016 and it is a fabulous building that the University has made available to us. We know from our Scholars' letters that this has made a huge difference to them, especially for some of the older Scholars who now live off-campus as it gives them a home away from home and a day-time base on campus. What a wonderful resource it was for our interview weekend too.
- Our first staff members. We were thrilled when Tim Mansfield agreed to move over from his position as Deputy Head of Bruce Hall to become our first Program Director. We have, in Tim, a person with experience and skills more than we could have hoped for. He soon recruited the delightful Andrea Murrow and together they are the backbone and engine room of Scholars House.
- Our first year of older Scholars taking on the role of mentoring younger Scholars. The 2014 Scholars received mentoring training prior to mentoring the "fresher" 2016 Scholars. This cross-cohort mentoring is a very exciting development as it is a great learning experience for both the mentors and mentees, and the Program is ever richer for Scholars getting to know other Scholars.
- Our first Readers progressing to become Selection Panel Members. So, what does this mean? Well, we receive so many Stage 1 scholarship applications that we require a team of more than 40 people to read them, and most of that team are ANU staff members who volunteer their time to learn about and support the Program – they are the Readers. When we find standout Readers we invite them to join the Selection Panel when vacancies arise, and Narci Teoh and Ryan Goss are the first to progress in this way. Their dedication is a blueprint for the future of the Program.
- Our first development proposal, to build two new halls of residence costing over $100 million. The proposed redevelopment of Bruce Hall, which we and the University announced in July 2016, will provide much needed on-campus student accommodation and the investment returns will provide the funding for the Scholarship Program in perpetuity. So the success of those residences will be crucial to the success of the Program in the years to come.

Leaving the best to last - we have just finished reading the letters which the scholars send to us at the end of each semester. We treasure these letters and the Scholars who write them. The 2014 Scholars now have written six letters and it is fascinating to read their latest reflections alongside some of their earliest letters and see their enormous personal growth. It is a real privilege being part of their life's journey.

2014 SCHOLARS

MATTHEW BARTON
SARAH CAMPBELL
MARCUS DAHL
JANET DAVEY

HANNAH HARMELIN
JOSEPH DEAN
CATHERINE HALL

GUY LECKENBY
LUCY KIRK
MATTHEW JACOB
SAM WEN HUANG

ALEXANDER MILES
MORGAN MARSHALL
HARRY MAIN

SAMUEL SAUNDERS
BRYCE ROBINSON
ABI RAJKUMAR
ELENA PLEASS

PHOEBE SKUSE
SAMANTHA TERRY
JESSICA WOOLNOUGH

JAKUB NABAGLO
KATIE WARD
CATHERINE PERRY
SORIN ZOTA

ON EXCHANGE SEM 2, 2016:
JAKUB: CANADA, CATHERINE: CHINA

LOOKING BACK ON 2016

BRYCE ROBINSON & ABI RAJKUMAR,
SCHOLARS HOUSE REPS FOR THE 2014 SCHOLARS

The 2014 Scholars are aging rapidly and—may we say—gracefully. For the inaugural Tuckwell Scholars, 2016 has been a year of go-getting, globe-trotting and, for some, graduating.

In a classic case of first child syndrome, this year saw the 2014 Scholars become a little despondent. Where have all these fresh-faced first years come from? Why aren't we seeing as much attention anymore? Why don't we see each other as much? Is caffeine actually a reasonable substitute for sleep? However, it only takes a quick moment of reflection to realise that the answer to most of these questions (except the last one, perhaps) is quite a happy one: we are growing up.

A quick glance across the third year cohort suggests precisely why we weren't seeing each other as much—because we have all kept ourselves so ludicrously busy! Some scholars have been soaring academically and making leaps and bounds in their own research. Some have been occupied with demanding and exciting jobs, ranging from retail to Parliament, from law firms to laboratories, and everything in between. Some have been interning, some have been volunteering, some have been on exchange, and some are beginning to take the reins of a diverse range of organisations.

As a natural result, we've been getting tired. You can only forge ahead for so long in a particular direction until it begins to wear you out! Fortunately, there have been some elements of newness which have broken up the hard slog.

Moving out of college has been a unique challenge for many scholars this year, but has brought an entirely different dimension to the university experience of many. We've also had another new home, in the form of the sparkly Scholars House 2.0, which has been an ever-important meeting place, thinking space and refuge for so many of the scholars. Of course, we must not neglect to mention the glorious entrance of Tim and Andrea into our lives, who have brought with them such an important sense of organisation, warmth, support and community.

As we come to the end of yet another year in the Tuckwell program, things are starting to come full circle. The first years that we have had the pleasure of mentoring throughout the year are now more confident, determined, innovative and ready to take on the world than we ever remember being! At the same time, we have all been emotionally bracing ourselves for the unthinkable: at some point, some of us are going to start graduating. 2016 marks the first lot of Tuckwell graduates, with six of the inaugural scholars completing their first degree. Luckily, we don't have to worry too much, because in true Tuckwell style they can't quite let go just yet, and will all be joining us at ANU once again next year in varying capacities.

And so, we end this year as we have ended the ones before it: a little worn out, slightly anxious for what's next, but above all, enormously grateful to Graham and Louise and to our fellows for providing us with opportunities we never thought possible.

2015 SCHOLARS

ANTHONY RICCI
BILLIE HOOK
BRODY HANNAN

JEEVAN HAIKERWAL
JONATHAN TJANDRA
LACHLAN ARTHUR

MADDISON PERKINS
MARY PARKER
MATTHEW BOWES
MICHAEL TURVEY

NICHOLAS WYCHE
NISHANTH PATHY
ROBERT COOK

TAMARA BOHLER
YAYA LU
ELIZA CROFT

AUDREY LEE
HANNAH GREGORY
JANE TAN

ON EXCHANGE SEM 2, 2016:
AUDREY: DENMARK,
HANNAH: FRANCE,
JANE: TURKEY

LOOKING BACK ON 2016

MARY PARKER & ANTHONY RICCI,
SCHOLARS HOUSE REPS FOR THE 2015 SCHOLARS

After the big summer break, the 2015 cohort came back to uni reinvigorated and ready to fully get amongst the variety of things that ANU has to offer. After orientation day, where we could all catch up again after three months apart, it is safe to say that the bonds and friendships between us all have become even stronger throughout 2016.

Putting aside the now-traditional feisty argument at Tuckwell camp down at Kioloa, it was on camp that we also managed to help construct the framework for the Tuckwell Enrichment Program that was spearheaded by Michael and run by us.

Having recently been wide-eyed first years coming into both an unknown university and the very intimidating scholarship program, we felt that we knew best what information would help the incoming scholars. This was reflected in what seemed to be a highly successful enrichment program throughout the first semester of 2016.

Even though Kioloa also provided a strong start for scholar bonding, as we all settled into our routines for the year, it became clear that we do not catch up as a group as often as some of us would like.

The introduction of a new Scholars House meant that we do a lot more together and catch up far more often — really making us feel a lot more like a cohort group.

It is good knowing that no matter when you want to study, you can pop in to scholars and see a few familiar faces. Some people are there so frequently you would think they never leave! Scholars House was also the site of the renowned second year 'burger cook out'.

While our numbers were lessened by four of us going on exchange through semester two, the burger night was well attended and contained the classic Tuckwell mix of delicious food and lively discussion.

During the burger night, I think many of us realised that while we sometimes have our differences, the fact that all of us are truly unique makes us so interesting as a group. So as we look forward to 2017 we can then expect some more world-beating, world-travelling, arguments in scholars, overachieving in almost every field the ANU has to offer and even, potentially, a wedding or two...

2016 SCHOLARS

BEN RADA
MARTIN BRANDON
SMITH CHARLIE
GUERIT CHLOE
HARPLEY

DAMIAN MAZUR
GEORGIA LEAK
ISABELLA MORTIMORE

JAMES HAYNE
JEN HUNG
JONAH HANSEN
JULIA LINDBLOM

KATE GARROW
LACHLAN CAMPBELL
LORANE GABORIT

LOUIS BECKER
LUCY STEDMAN
MADELEINE MCGREGOR
MAX MOFFAT

SACHINI POOGODA
SAM BANNISTER
SARAH CALLINAN

ALEX PATERSON
TOM GOODWIN
TIM HUME

LOOKING BACK ON 2016

MAX MOFFAT & SACHINI POOGODA,
SCHOLARS HOUSE REPS FOR THE 2016 SCHOLARS

*This year began with the hot Canberra sun.
24 young Scholars, excited for semester one.
But despite our extensive research it was true,
That, of the university experience, we did not have a clue.*

*The first few weeks passed with many changes,
At our colleges and classes, we made friends out of strangers.
The Tuckwell program, though, remained a mystery,
What were we to glean from its short history?*

*After a few TEP sessions, we realised the fact,
That this whole program is about giving back.
With our mentors and Fellows watching us like hawks,
The seeds of this knowledge began to sprout stalks.*

*A few months later and it was already clear,
That 2016 would be quite a year.
Inward Bound, musicals, interhall sport,
Our list of interests is far from short.
Internships, societies, and volunteering,
Opportunities everywhere; oh, how appealing!*

*Despite not knowing each other for long,
The bonds in our group already seemed strong,
And there is no doubt that this can be traced,
To camping at Kioloa; a very special place.*

*It was here where the first links of friendship grew,
Under a starry sky and campfire near an ocean
blue.
For the rest of the year the tone was set,
A sense of camaraderie that we couldn't forget.*

*But we needed more than just camp alone,
To develop a culture that we may call our own.
Scholars House was relied on, a place of meeting,
Of study and laughter, and moments fleeting.*

*Whether it was pancakes at breakfast or a heated debate,
Studying for exams or chatting with mates,
Scholars House became a place we treasure,
The perfect blend of study and leisure.*

*So the prospect of second year causes us no alarm,
Since first year was a time of good humour and charm,
In fact, we confess that we are quite keen,
For the adventure that will be 2017.*

FIRST YEARS' REFLECTION

LUCY STEDMAN

FDD Eng & AdvCmpt / Engineering

First year was completely different to anything I've experienced in my life so far.

I've met a whole range of people — all of whom have their own stories, unique personalities, idiosyncrasies and backgrounds. Meeting such a diverse range of people has definitely been one of the highlights of my year, and living on college has easily been another. The independence I've had to adopt is also something new. Ensuring I eat well, keep fit, keep up, keep sane: all on me. I'd like to say I'm managing, but it's definitely something I didn't really consider before coming here.

SAM BANNISTER

FDD: Law/Economics

My first year at the ANU has been a fantastic experience.

The intense and inclusive culture at my residential college has helped make Canberra feel like home since day one. There was never a dull moment in 2016 — I've enjoyed getting involved in college social and sporting activities, immersing myself in the Tuckwell program, making new friends from all around Australia and the world, and learning from some of the world's best academics at the nation's top university.

It's always a thrilling time to be at university in your first year. More thrilling still, being launched into your university experience with the backbone of a scholarship program to help support your endeavours, mentor you through academic pathways and facilitate events with other new students to help you build a community of friends. Looking back on their first year at the ANU, members of our 2016 Scholars take a moment of reflection on how they think their transition to university life has been.

LOUIS BECKER

FDD Arts SocSci Busn & Sci / Arts

This year, I've learned to cook and to read Ancient Greek; to perform poems and to play hockey; to understand phonology, fuzzy-logic and the first writing.

I've studied a medieval physician, a 16th century murderer/painter and a 20th century murdered poet, and have been exposed to some incredible thinkers – from decipherers of newly-discovered fragments of Sophocles, to experts on the evolution of spite, to writers of books about Babylonian gods, and musicals about Russian revolutionaries.

SARAH CALLINAN

FDD Eng & AdvCmpt / B BusAdmin

Things I've learnt from my first year of university...

Procrastination isn't a bad habit — it's a lifestyle choice. Societies are awesome but Netflix will always be your greatest extra-curricular. Chocolate can and will be a diet staple. It is possible to get used to being sick 73% of the time. Saying yes to things can lead to great experiences. Naps are your friend, and friends are always more important than homework. First year will be quite difficult at times and that's okay – you just have to keep moving forward.

TIMOTHY HUME

PhB (Science)

My first year at the ANU has been an inspiring, challenging and transformative experience.

As a PhB student I have thrived in the intensive academic research environment and taken the opportunity to commence a research project in nuclear physics. The Tuckwell Scholarship program has also provided me with an invaluable community where I have found support and inspiration throughout all aspects of my university experience. This year has reinforced my ambitions and presented many pathways for the future.

GEORGIA LEAK

FDD ArtsSoScBusSc / Arts

After a year out of home — a year spent falling in love with new places, new people and, most surprisingly, a new me — I can assure you that my life has changed for the better.

The nation's capital and its number one university have provided me with the opportunity to write for a student newspaper, volunteer at an inaugural writers festival and, amazingly, become the editor in chief of a professional publication! Despite the fact that first year has been far from a smooth journey for me, I cannot think of anywhere I would rather explore, take unexpected turns at, or, sometimes, find myself downright lost in, than Canberra and the ANU.

JONAH HANSEN

PhB (Science)

I have really enjoyed all of my first year; making great new friends at college, staying up playing cards until the early hours of the morning, and enjoying the thrill of IB and Endpoint.

Academically, it has been fantastic to be able to meet many of the professors that I'd heard about throughout high school, such as Nobel prize winner Prof. Brian Schmidt. Moreover, my first year has provided the incredible opportunity — and one that would only come about at the ANU — for me to pursue research into stellar clusters and associations at Mt Stromlo.

YU-TING (JENNIFER) HUNG
PhB (Science)

First year has both met and greatly exceeded my expectations.

I had expected to meet a diverse range of people, to be challenged by my studies, and to finally experience independence living away from home. What I didn't expect was just how quickly strong friendships could form in a year, how much there was to learn about the world of science and how much I would enjoy the new found freedom. It's truly been an unforgettable year!

JAMES HAYNE
FDD: ArtsSoScBusSc / BPPE

I have always lived by the ethos that “a man that dares to waste one hour of time hasn't discovered the value of life”.

From volunteering in schools with fellow ANU students to travelling to Myanmar on a study tour focusing on political and economic development, this ethos has never been more meaningful. However, these opportunities have only been possible with the support of the Tuckwell program. For that, I am eternally grateful – I feel like I have discovered the value of life.

JULIA LINDBLOM
PhB (Science)

I can say with confidence that my first year at the ANU has been an incredible one.

Not only has 2016 been a year of academic development for me, it has also been incredibly transformative on a personal level. Experiences that have been highlights include living on residence at Bruce Hall, where I was part of a diverse, exciting and dynamic community, and the opportunities I have had completing research in the Research School of Chemistry in second semester. 2016 truly will be a year to remember!

LACHLAN CAMPBELL
FDD Adv Computing / Engineering

First year has been absolutely life-changing. I have learnt so much — and not just in terms of my degree — but about myself.

Studying here in Canberra at the ANU has changed the way in which I look at the world around me and how I can, potentially, make a difference within it. Never before did I think that such a short period of time in my life would be so integral in shaping who I am and who I will eventually become.

LORANE GABORIT
FDD: Science/ BPPE

Before starting at ANU, people told me absolutely everything and anything when describing first year from “you’re not going to sleep at all”, to “you’ll probably fail something” and “you might find yourself running through the bush in the middle of the night for a 60km plus ultramarathon.”

Of course, I didn’t believe them, but even if it sounds crazy, everything they tell you is true. My first year hasn’t been perfect. But even if it’s been one of the hardest things I’ve ever done, it’s been more fun and rewarding than I can begin to describe. Stepping out of my comfort zone on the first day of O-week turned out to be the beginning of countless friendships, adventures, mistakes and lessons that I couldn’t have anticipated.

TOM GOODWIN
FDD Law / BPPE

Some timely advice to the incoming 2017 Scholars: Don’t underestimate the change, excitement, and confusion of moving out of home! It’s hard, so give yourself a break if it takes months for things to start clicking.

Keep doing a few of the things you did at high school because that will help you feel comfortable in a sea of all that is new and unknown. In saying that, try some new things that you think fit you well and try to stretch yourself. I have enjoyed having a few things which are off campus as well — it helped me get acquainted with the wider Canberra world and those who inhabit it.

KATE GARROW
FDD Law / Arts

Starting university this year marks the first time in my life that I've been truly independent.

Living away from home has allowed me to try things that I never would have considered like playing ultimate frisbee, climbing Mount Ainslie at midnight, making a film in 40 hours, or dancing at Parliament House. My degree has offered independence as well, letting me pursue my academic passions. Just this semester, I've debated the fairness of our justice system, performed extracts from modern American plays, and analysed how tourism affects Indigenous Peruvian women. It has truly been an unforgettable year.

CHARLIE GUERIT
FDD Law / BlntI SecStud

In short, my first year of uni has been a whirlwind.

Thrown into a totally foreign environment, I was left to contend with a barrage of new experiences, new people, and new challenges. At the end of this year I can say that I'm bruised, tired and drained. But to be totally honest, it has been the best year of my life. New friends, new knowledge, new experiences, and new dance moves. What more could you ask for?

CHLOE HARPLEY
FDD Law / Arts

"It is the unknown that excites the ardour of scholars, who, in the known alone, would shrivel up with boredom".

These words of my favourite modernist poet, Wallace Stevens, truly capture the year that has been. Every so often I have the chance to reflect, and am constantly astounded at how each and every day – at the ANU, at Bruce Hall, and with the incredible friends I have met – excites me. It has been a year of impulsivity (and at times, confusion) but ultimately, I look towards 2017 with anticipation of what the unknown will bring.

MADELINE MCGREGOR

BPPE/Juris Doctor

University has been a space for self-creation.

It is a place where I am able to challenge myself, extend myself and present myself however I choose. I am given the respect and freedom of an adult, as well as the appropriate support for this experience and a new environment that has allowed me to explore myself without limits. I am incredibly grateful for how exciting and rich this new chapter of my life has been so far.

MAX MOFFAT

FDD: Law / Arts

By far the highlights of the year for me have been Big Night Out and Inward Bound; two very different events run by the ANU residential colleges.

Big Night Out was a concert held early in the year which featured a small band from each college performing to a crowd of over 1000 people. Playing my trumpet representing Bruce Hall at this event was absolutely unforgettable. Inward Bound can be best described as an orienteering ultramarathon which, despite my team finishing second last in, was a lot of fun for me.

SACHINI POOGODA

FDD Science / Arts

First year was an absolute rollercoaster of highs and lows.

Moving across the country — away from home — was by far the most terrifying thing I have ever done, but I cannot express how glad I am that I did. Thrown into a loving community at college, life this year has been a rush of learning how to cook, meeting incredible people, balls for every occasion and mad study. Above all, first year showed me that, sometimes, the things that scare you the most are the most rewarding.

DAMIAN MAZUR
BPPE/Juris Doc

First year at the ANU has been great because it has allowed me to both find and develop my niche.

My residential college has become my home, with memories such as cooking a croquembouche at 3:00 am with friends being something truly unique that I will never forget. My courses have both challenged and extended me and, in doing so, I know I will be returning to the ANU next year with more passion to study what I love.

ISABELLA MORTIMORE
FDD: Arts SocSci Busn & Sci / Economics

My first year of university has really been, what can only be described as, a year of firsts.

2016 has seen me move away from home for the first time and get the closest I have ever been to independence; the beginning for many lifelong friendships; the fortification of my passion for economics; and the emergence of my, although still budding, love for Canberra (what can I say, it has grown on me since my year 7 Canberra tour). First year has been the start of what is shaping up to be an unforgettable and enriching undergraduate degree at the ANU.

BENJAMIN RADA MARTIN
FDD ArtsSoScBusSc / BPPE

2016 was a year of both excitement and difficulty.

Some aspects of my first year matched my expectations — the thrill of moving to a new city, the enjoyment of living in the community of Bruce Hall and the independence of university life. However, the move also challenged me as an individual — taking me out of my bubble back home, forcing me to form completely new friendships and to find ways to pick myself up after failing. Undoubtedly, 2016 was a year where the Ben walking in and the Ben walking out are different people and, I believe, it's for the better.

BRANDOM SMITH
FDD Law / B Intl Security

Exhilarating. This one word sums up my first year at university.

After finishing school in a small coastal town, I never would have thought I could say that I have friends from every state and territory. Nor could I imagine that I would I be travelling to Perth to play cricket at the Australian University games, meeting the likes of Hugh White, or attending yoga sessions run by a Pro-Vice Chancellor. Most importantly, after everything, I can't wait to do it all again.

“First year has been absolutely life-changing. I have learnt so much – and not just in terms of my degree – but about myself.”

-Lachlan Campbell

LETTERS FROM THE ROAD

STORIES FROM OUR
TUCKWELL SCHOLARS
WHO WERE ON STUDY ABROAD
OR EXCHANGE PROGRAMS
IN 2016

CATHERINE PERRY
BEIJING, CHINA

Greetings from Beijing!

I have been studying at Peking University in Beijing for over a month now and am thoroughly enjoying the experience. I am primarily studying Chinese language courses whilst I am over here, and although I am learning a lot, classes unfortunately start at 8 am every day.

Apart from study, I am also interning at the Foundation for Australian Studies Centre in China, which mainly involves research work.

There is plenty to see and do here in China, both inside and outside of Beijing.

We have just returned from the week-long 'national holiday', during which I travelled to Xi'an (home to the terracotta warriors) and Shijiazhuang (which despite being the most heavily polluted city in China, was my favourite of the two). Whilst I am here, I am also hoping to travel to Harbin in far north China (where temperatures will be -20°C) to see their famous ice and snow festival.

JANE TAN
BUDAPEST, HUNGARY

Sziaosztok! I'm currently in Hungary participating in the Budapest Semesters in Mathematics program. True to the program name, I'm taking 5 maths courses here including a lot of graph theory and combinatorics, these being Hungarian specialties. I'm also learning Hungarian language which, despite its rather fearsome reputation, is actually really nice; there are very few tenses, all spelling is phonetic, the number one rule is "whatever sounds good goes" (aka vowel harmony), and the existence of 'tessék' which is a polite word used to mean basically anything you want it to.

Apart from studying maths in the home of Euros, some highlights have been taking cruises on the Danube, being part of the St Stephen's Day celebration and other festivals, seeing the musical Les Misérables in Hungarian, day trips to Vienna with Bratislava and Zagreb to come, and eating Kürtoskalács (a roasted doughy tube of sugary goodness). I've also discovered that the zoo here has a large section devoted to Australia, which is perfect for those times when I miss the sound of cockatoos (rarely, I'll admit).

Üdv

Jane

AUDREY LEE
COPENHAGEN, DENMARK

Hej from Copenhagen!

I'm currently on a semester exchange at the University of Copenhagen, taking Danish language classes and studying chemistry. So far it's been a whirlwind of trying to figure out how Danish society works, from finding the best pastry shop to riding a bike according to the Danish rules. Copenhagen is a great place for cycling, with cycling paths pretty much on every road – even a novice cyclist like me can manage.

I've really enjoyed meeting and getting to know people from different backgrounds, and surprisingly I've bumped into quite a few Aussies here too.

Although it has been challenging at times, I can definitely say that it's been a great experience so far, and I'm looking forward to the rest of this semester!

Hej hej, (Bye!)

- Audrey

HANNAH GREGORY
EDINBURGH, UNITED KINGDOM

Greetings from Edinburgh!

For the last few months I've been able to call Scotland my home. Though my time here will shortly expire, there are many things I have learnt and am continuing to learn from this humble city and my semester abroad. I am studying international relations and social and cultural issues whilst here. Despite clichés, I have managed to develop an international conscience and cultural awareness from studying on the other side of the world, particularly in terms of development. I've been given a Eurocentric lens through which to examine some key global development issues, and also been able to grasp local development concerns that are both so different and so similar to our own.

Aside from my studies, delving into the beauty of Edinburgh has enriched my experience abroad. Its Scottish heritage is demonstrated in the street, as you witness men clad in kilts playing the bagpipes, the popularity of Scotch whiskey, and the many Ceilidhs on show (a traditional folk music and dancing event). I've spent time exploring the art, theatre and music that is consistently displayed and appreciating the history of the city (particularly Edinburgh Castle and the Scott Monument) as well as adventuring out into the renowned Scottish Highlands.

- Hannah

JAKUB NABAGLO
VANCOUVER, CANADA

I write to you from rainy Vancouver, where the people are warmer than the weather, and the views are sweeter than maple syrup. It has been raining here for forty days and forty nights. I am waiting for someone to build an ark.

Despite that, I have been enjoying my time here very much. Vancouver is the Melbourne of Canada, with its hipster cafés, vibrant culture, and being neglected in favour of its larger sibling.

I am studying this semester at the University of British Columbia, a university much bigger than ANU, possessing a spacious coastal campus with its own beach. A nude beach, no less. In typical North American fashion, we have fraternities with filthy parties, there are college sports with mascots and cheerleaders, and everyone wears university merchandise.

I have been taking this opportunity to travel around North America. The closest big city is Seattle, where I spent a weekend.

It is the home of bad coffee, also known as Starbucks.

There is a Starbucks on every city block. It also sports the first Starbucks ever, adorned with historical features, and a long line of pumpkin spice morons.

San Francisco was another city on my list. It being the technology capital of the world, I am likely to one day end up living there. It is a city of contrasts. On one hand, it is full of start-ups and rich entrepreneurs, living in all the comforts the city provides: press a button on the wall and have a bottle of cucumber water delivered to your door. But taking refuge in camps just outside the city are thousands of homeless people, priced out of the housing market by the progressing gentrification. They are a blunt reminder of the human costs of the thriving Silicon Valley.

I also plan on visiting the U.S. east coast in a few weeks, followed shortly by a ski trip to Whistler.

- Jakub

Back in 2015 when I was first preparing my initial application, if you gave the Tuckwell Scholarship a quick google search you would find a Wikipedia article that said Tuckwell Scholars all boarded together in a lodging called Scholars House. Although, much to my dismay, this isn't actually the case, with 2016 seeing the opening of what has been dubbed 'The New Scholars House' on Fellows Lane, it's actually not a far stretch of the truth to say that, at least some scholars, practically live there.

Fitted out with private study pods that allow you to online shop in peace, totally unaccountable for neglecting a final essay; the most comfortable bean bags for group viewing sessions of The Bachelor; as well as a Nespresso coffee machine that has helped economics and statistics students alike to develop their skills in creating a self-sustaining coffee and milk system; it is a common assumption that Tuckwell Scholars are drawn to Scholars House for its incredible facilities.

Although, admittedly, I could never say no to a quick 'Bachie Session' and coffee with the like of Isabella Mortimore and Lorane Gaborit, the new Scholars House is about so much more than the shiny new things that it has to offer us.

HOME SWEET HOME

2016 BRINGS WITH IT
A NEW HOME BASE
FOR TUCKWELL SCHOLARS, IN 'SCHOLARS HOUSE'
ON FELLOWS LANE

BY GEORGIA LEAK

Vice Chancellor and Nobel Laureate, Professor Brian Schmidt helps make pancakes for our 2014 Tuckwell Scholar graduates at Scholars House in December

Scholars House on Fellows Lane truly has become a place that I call home. Existing as the first space that can hold all three cohorts of scholars at the same time, the opening of the new Scholars House has seen the program imbued with a new sense of community and camaraderie.

In frequenting Scholars House over the past six months I have made friends out of third year scholars that I once found oh-so-intimidating and found my weekly 'creative dead ends' solved by fresh outlooks of law or economics students.

Heck, I've even learnt a thing or two about game theory thanks to Nishanth!

I, for one, cannot wait to welcome the new 2017 scholars with open arms into Scholars House on Fellows Lane. Studying there, I am always acutely aware of the fact that I am sitting amongst the likes of future politicians, astronauts, economists and doctors.

As the program grows in both age and size, so too will it diversify, with new scholars bringing fresh and unique experiences, ideas and passions. And I can honestly say it will be an honour to be influenced by them.

A NOTE FROM THE HEAD OF SCHOLARS HOUSE

PROFESSOR RICHARD BAKER

It has been a momentous year for the Program. With the opening of Scholars House, we now have a venue where all scholars can study and socialise. With first, second and third year scholars sharing the development and running events we have had a wonderful flourishing of activities for scholars to participate in. As well as many academic focussed evenings, we have had purely social events with the 2016 cohort showing the way on how to organise spontaneous ice cream nights!

An academic discussion that stood out for me was a great night organised by all the first, second and third year scholars doing the The Bachelor of Politics, Philosophy and Economics degree. The discussion was around an article by the prominent economist Richard Denniss on the implications of Brexit. With the author in attendance a lively discussion ensued. Another extraordinary night was organised by students again from across all three year groups to discuss breaking down the stigma of talking about depression. The night was facilitated by ANU's chapter of Batyr a NGO set up by ANU alumni Sebastian Robertson. Another highlight of the year has been the successful introduction of a peer mentoring scheme where pairs of third year scholars were matched up with pairs of first year scholars. In response to much positive feedback this scheme will continue in 2017 with the new first year Tuckwell Scholars being matched up with a mix of 2014 and 2015 scholars for mentoring support.

I write these words at the end of particular historic week for the Tuckwell Program. Five of our initial cohort of scholars who started their degrees in 2014 have just been awarded their undergraduate degrees. To celebrate this a new Tuckwell Program tradition has been launched with the Vice-Chancellor hosting a breakfast for graduating scholars and their families (pg 25). With all 6 graduating students staying on at ANU to do graduate degrees I am delighted that we will still have all our original 2014 scholars with us next year to continue to play the leadership role each and every one of them has so willingly played in shaping the Tuckwell Program since the day they (and the Program) started at ANU in February 2014.

The most rewarding thing for me as Head of Scholars House this year has been to see the growing role Scholars are playing across the campus. Daily in my role as the Pro Vice-Chancellor responsible for student issues I have come across Tuckwell Scholars making a difference. As you can see from various pieces in this publication Tuckwell Scholars have taken on leadership roles in Residential Halls as Senior Residents and on Residential Committees, in clubs and societies, in coaching roles in Inward Bound and in other ANU sporting events, and in so many other groups working on campus, more broadly in Canberra, Australia or the world. In these and so many other ways the Tuckwell Scholars have been living out the Tuckwell vision of scholars reinvesting their knowledge, skills and experience in ways that positively benefit others.

the FELLOWS

THE FELLOWS REFLECT ON THE YEAR
THEY'VE SEEN PASS BY WHILE MENTORING THEIR SCHOLARS

MARY KILCLINE CODY

I have been part of the Tuckwell adventure since its inception and in the past three years, it has gone from strength to strength. This year, we acquired a lovely new venue, great new staff, developed new approaches and produced new publications. But for me, the scholars are still the heart and soul of the programme. They are wonderful young people—they work hard, contribute to their community, deal with life's challenges, make time for their friends. I am very proud of them.

PETER KANOWSKI

Writing at year's end, I think back to the 2016 Commencement Weekend and Kioala Camp, and wonder where the year has gone. But a review of any of the Scholar's entries in The Bell reminds me of the kaleidoscope of activities that characterise each Scholar's year, and of how the Program continues to evolve and mature. I also reflect on how each of the three Scholar cohorts, and the new Scholars House, added value to the Program in 2016, and set the stage for the further development of the Program in 2017. We have lots to both celebrate and anticipate!

MOLLY TOWNES O'BRIEN

I have been delighted to see the scholars grow, change and challenge themselves. This year, I mentored quite a number of students who study law, which meant I had the opportunity to see them casually more often. I met up with students while they were out taking walks or going for coffee. We also made good use of the new Scholars House. I have enjoyed spending time with them and have learned a lot from them. They are my mentors as much as I am one of theirs.

CHRIS BROWNE

The Tuckwell Scholars are a constant breath of fresh air. They bring enthusiasm, creativity and possibility to everyone's university experience. The mentor relationship in the Tuckwell program—where scholars are accepted and supported to do their best in their chosen pursuits, whether academic, professional or social—is a positive model for empowering students from all walks of life, and has significantly changed the way I interact with all of my students.

ENGAGEMENT

The Tuckwell Scholars are a group of passionate and involved students. Scholars across all years are vehemently involved with events and organisations across campus and throughout Canberra, for a variety of different causes. Here are some highlights of just a few of the cool things that scholars have engaged with this year.

NICK WYCHE

I work with the Innovation ACT competition, where uni students in the Canberra region have the opportunity to learn how to turn their ideas into viable venture concepts. At the end, the best teams are selected to pitch their ideas to a panel of Australian entrepreneurs to win a share of a $50,000 seed grant. I've loved being a part of this unique program - Canberra is small enough that you can get to know the innovation ecosystem, but large enough to offer fantastic opportunities like this.

MARY PARKER

This year I've worked as the social-justice sub-committee chair at Bruce Hall. I've also been a Mentor Team Leader for Raising Hope and I've worked as a swimming instructor at the Australian Institute of Sport. Next year I'm taking on the role of Director of Operations for Raising Hope.

JONAH HANSEN

This year, I was a general representative of the ANU Physics society. This opportunity gave me many ways to help promote a subject that I enjoy, as well as network with some of the prominent lecturers of the ANU and develop my leadership skills. I also helped with the ANU ConocoPhillips Science Experience, which was an amazing few days that allowed me to share my love of science with high schoolers.

JONATHAN TJANDRA

Earlier this year in January, I went to Sulawesi with Obor Berkat Indonesia and my local church to help administer medical supplies to the people as well as help out at an orphanage. It was a fascinating experience seeing how doctors managed to treat their patients in conditions very different from Australian clinics. Though I am not a medical student, I found the trip to be educational and I hope to go back to Indonesia this summer to continue the work.

JEEVAN HAIKERWAL

UN Youth ACT is Australia's largest not for profit, youth-to-youth peer education network. We interact with over 15,000 highschool aged students across Australia, and the ACT division runs over 30 events every year. Working with UN Youth puts you in front of classrooms, at the head of auditoriums and, if you want to, takes you to other continents. There's a lot to learn and give in this diverse group of UN/ learning/fun-time enthusiasts.

CHLOE HARPLEY

Volunteering at the inaugural Canberra Writers' Festival with fellow Scholar, Georgia Leak, was a highlight of this year. We had the opportunity to experience the inner-workings of successfully executing such a large scale event, while rubbing shoulders with the likes of Yann Martel, A.C Grayling, Jackie French and Isobel Carmody. Aside from being a part of this literary dream, my own work with the executive of PFLAG Capital Region in establishing a queer* youth mentoring program has been exhilarating, and I eagerly anticipate its development as we look towards 2017.

SACHINI POOGODA

ANU Interhall Productions was formed in 2010 to increase the artistic opportunities of students living on campus. This year we had students take on the melancholy sounds of Steven Sondheim’s ‘Sweeney Todd.’ I was blessed to play the part of Toby, on stage, while Max and Jeevan sacrificed themselves to the orchestra pit, taking on the challenge of discordant chords and badly transcribed sheet music. With eight shows spanning over two weeks, this musical took a huge amount of dedication and energy, but the end result was a beautiful show that I still experience withdrawal symptoms from.

BRANDON SMITH

This year I took part in Raising Hope, a program which provides mentoring for high school students facing difficulty with study and school life. Taking part in this mentoring was such a rewarding experience as you could influence and see real changes in the students’ attitude and behaviour at school. The connections made with these students were special and the teachers remarked that students would often only come to school as they knew Raising Hope was coming that day. It was so inspiring to see over the course of a few short weeks, students who before would struggle to concentrate and focus on school work, actively asking questions and seeking help to improve both their academic and life skills.

CHARLIE GUERIT

This year I ran from Canberra Civic to Bondi as part of the Civic-to-Surf Initiative. The event, held by Batyr, was conducted in an effort to promote preventative education surrounding mental health. Put simply, it was awesome. Not only did I get to hang out with a mix of old and new friends, but I also spent my time doing something that had true worth and meaning. Charity, beach, running and mates: it doesn’t get much better than that.

TOM GOODWIN

Connecting with Basketball ACT has been a wonderful way to engage with the wider Canberra Community, pursue community service and take my passion for basketball to a higher level. Playing with the Wests has given me access to a well coached basketball program, and also presented me with the opportunity to coach voluntarily. Working for basketball ACT, I have held a part time job refereeing junior games. Late this year, I had the chance to play with the ACT u20s which was a fantastic experience. Next year I intend to play socially.

JOE DEAN

batyr is a for-purpose organization that aims to engage, educate and empower young people to have positive conversations about mental health. Volunteering with the ANU Chapter involves organising and participating in events that generate exposure for batyr so that people are encouraged to see our programs at the ANU. 2016 was batyr’s first year at the ANU and, thus, a constant learning process. Most definitely an effective year, we exceeded the exposure targets the ANU had set for us and went some way towards saving lives from suicide—the leading cause of death for Australians from 15 to 44. If anyone is keen to get involved — whether that be old or new scholars — please let me know.

OTHER INVOLVEMENT:

Engineering Students Association Gen Rep, Sol Invictus Tech team member, She Leads conference CECS delegate, Civic2Surf, Canberra Space Camp volunteer team leader, Fifty50 events manager, National Youth Science Forum, AIME, ANU PhB Society - President, Chemistry Peer Mentor, Teacher at Vanuatu’s Little Stars Summer School, Global Undergraduate Leaders Program, PhB Student Mentor, President of the Ursula Hall Residents Committee, Inward Bound Coaching, Sports Rep for Bruce Hall, IARU Global Summer Program, Senior Residents at various halls, Editors and Contributors to WORONI,

...and the list goes on!

SCHOLAR LIFE

The scholars are a group of gifted people, sure. But in addition to academics, there's a large part of the life of a Tuckwell Scholar that looks like ... well, the life of many other students at university. They engage with friends and events in Canberra, making connections across the nation's capital and even playing in the snow from time to time. Here are some highlights from the past year for our social scholars.

Harry Main and Max Moffat
with a friend at Bruce Hall
Commencement

Bryce Robinson and
Catherine Perry at Law Ball

Tom Goodwin playing AFL for Johns College

Catherine Hall and Abi Rajkumar on a night on the town

Maddy McGregor and Georgia Leak in a Canberra Winter Wonderland

Hannah Gregory and Jonathan Tjandra at the Burgmann Commencement Dinner at Parliament House

Matthew Bowes and Chloe Harpley as the leads in Louis Nowra's production, 'Cosi' - put on by Bruce Hall

Lucy Stedman, Lorane Gaborit, Lachlan Campbell, Jonah Hansen and Alex Patterson posing with The Bell Magazine for the Tuckwell Scavenger Hunt

Max Moffatt playing trumpet for Bruce Hall at the inter-college Big Night Out competition

Damian Mazur and Sam Bannister showing off their fancy threads at a Bruce Hall event

Catherine Hall, Sam Wen and Abi Rajkumar at Tuckwell Commencement

Phoebe Skuse
and Elena
Pleass out and about in Canberra

Mary Parker arrives at End Point after completing Inward Bound in 2016, representing Bruce Hall

Bryce Robinson and Matthew
Barton at the ANU Law Ball

Jonathan Tjandra photographs the beautiful Indonesian landscape on his trip earlier this year (see pg 29)

Isabella Mortimore, Brandon Smith & Georgia Leak at Johns College Valeté

James Hayne, Max Moffat, Maddy McGregor, Brandon Smith & Lucy Stedman enjoy an impromptu bacon and egg roll breakfast on Scholars House veranda

Brandom Smith, Charlie Guerit, Lorane Gaborit, Georgia Leak, Lucy Stedman, Chloe Harpley, Maddy McGregor and Isabella Mortimore at Kiola for Tuckwell Camp - enjoying the first beach they'd seen in weeks!

Anthony Ricci speaking at Bruce Hall Valette

Damian Mazur with Dr. Paul Chen at the Tuckwell Academic Dinner

“Meeting such an eclectically formidable collection of people was humbling and invigorating.”

ORIENTATION DAY

BY MADELIENE MCGREGOR

Apprehension, ardour and awe; these were the alliterated afflictions articulating my Tuckwell Orientation.

The day arrived as a reprieve amidst a flurry of O-week college antics. Marnie gave us John's freshers special Deputy Vice Chancellor permission to remove our bandanas for the first time since our arrival, and our cohort interacted for the first time since Interview Weekend. We ate rolls, mingling amongst excitable faces, sharing O-week tales and finding common ground on feelings of leaving home, living in a college, navigating washing machines and wondering which came first, ISIS the student portal or the militant extremists.

Meeting such an eclectically formidable collection of people was humbling and invigorating. Interacting, sharing jokes and dog obsessions with them, it was easy to think they could be some of your greatest friends — the ones you keep for life even.

It's easy to question "why am I here?" when surrounded by a calibre of individuals this high.

It is easy to look at others and think "he's going to lead a NASA project one day" or "years later her poetry will be so revered it'll be referenced in pop culture" or rather disappointingly "it's taking so long, they might be the ones to legalise gay marriage". It is easy to quietly despair about your lack of degree direction, career goals and general uncertainty regarding how you wish to proceed post-school.

But rather than making things worse, these stimulating people, with their interesting ideas, crazy hypotheticals, ambitious co-curricular activities and utterly variegated lives, provide inspiring windows into scenes/vistas of possibilities for your own direction, as well as making the archetypal university journey of self-discovery even more remarkable/attractive/noteworthy/awesome.

Scholars Madeliene McGregor and Alex Paterson speak with Professor Marnie Hughes-Warrington, Deputy Vice Chancellor (Academic), alongside their parents

Scholars Georgia Leak & Brandon Smith, pose with their parents and Dr. Colin Taylor, Director of Alumni Relations & Philanthropy

COMMENCEMENT PARENTS LUNCH

BY LORANE GABORIT

A highlight of the commencement weekend this year was, without a doubt, the Parents' Lunch hosted at University House. One of our first opportunities to introduce our parents to Graham, Louise, the interview panel, and the Fellows and staff responsible for running the program, it was a really exciting and entertaining event.

For the parents present, it seemed that finally putting faces and places to everything we'd been rambling on about for almost a year was reassuring.

For scholars, 'nerve-racking' might be a better descriptor of our attempts at keeping our parents well behaved.

Recently, when I asked my own parents what stood out to them from the event, my Mum told me it was when Louise congratulated the parents there, telling them in her address that she knew just how hard they had worked and that it was okay to feel proud of us. Vice Chancellor Brian Schmidt, Graham Tuckwell, Richard Baker, Mary Kilcline Cody and Peter Kanowski also gave really interesting and heartfelt speeches throughout the lunch, explaining different aspects of the scholarship as well as telling stories from their own lives.

Yet for my Dad, what stood out the most was the fact that everyone present knew exactly who we each were, and was interested to learn even more about us.

Conversations sprung up between every single person about anything and everything, from what our college rooms were like, to whether we'd changed our minds about how we wanted to change the world after graduating.

For me, the Commencement Parents' Lunch will certainly be a memorable event not just for how welcoming everyone was, but also for the way it allowed us to acknowledge our parents for standing by our sides for so long.

In the midst of a hectic transition to first year uni and a new city, the event was a great reminder of the importance of support networks, and a chance to show our family just what good hands we were now in.

COMMENCEMENT DINNER

BY MATTHEW BOWES

There's a funny contradiction at the heart of our group of Tuckwell scholars. On the one hand, we try to make time to spend together, to forge a real cohort, a group of friends who we can rely on to help us through any manner of difficulties. On the other hand, we've got so many busy-bodies amongst us that it's often difficult to pin everyone down. Getting everyone together at the same time and the same place is, as Tim and Andrea would surely attest, no small feat. The Commencement dinner then takes on a fairly unique quality amongst the year's social calendar. Aside from the couple of us who've decided to flee the country for the excitement of exchange, Commencement sees the entire Tuckwell cohort gather together for one night that is, just for a change, all about us.

Whilst the old scholars house, tucked away inside the Molly Huxley Room, wasn't the most exciting of places, it did have the advantage of being in close proximity to the hall at University House. And so it was there that many of us headed before the night itself commenced, to stash away some clothing in preparation for a possible long trek into civic afterwards. Special mention must be made to those who took this opportunity to try to scare several unsuspecting Scholars as they climbed the narrow stairs.

After this impromptu meeting, we all gathered properly in Uni House to engage in that most Tuckwellian of rituals: awkward mingling. I find it particularly amusing to watch the sudden changes in topics of conversation that occur when one of the University's most senior names interrupts a circle of Scholars intent on debriefing about what was done (or more pertinently what was not done) upon their holidays. Nevertheless, academic small talk is left to the wayside once again the moment these situations are diffused; after all, with so many people doing so many different things in the several months that have passed since we all last met, there are plenty of good stories to go around.

Having had enough of this FOMO-inducing banter, it was on to the Great Hall itself to enjoy the dinner. Bedecked in stunning fashion with fairy lights above and candles on the tables below, it looked an absolute treat. The first years nervously lined themselves up to be rung in, as the rest of the scholars took their seats. As always, those who were placed near the front of the hall, alongside the most important guests, debated the merits of their situation. Was it a preordained sign of their higher social standing, or rather an unfortunate accident that would see their playful dinner-time banter curtailed by topics of a more serious and sober nature.

The ceremony started with the new Tuckwell Scholars being rung in one by one. Those looking on could sense the palpable excitement in the air, and when the final scholar was rung in, and the final tintinnabulations (Cheers for that one Tim) finished, the round of applause was deafening.

After this most formal part of the evening was finished, attention turned to the guests of honour themselves. Graham and Louise did not disappoint, with their heartfelt messages certainly finding an appreciative audience amongst those who had seen the scholarship program grow so fast in only its first few years. Hearing from all those there, and seeing how far we'd all come, the atmosphere of Commencement told the same story as Graham in his speech: for the Tuckwell Scholars, it was going to be the biggest year yet.

*Scholars enjoying a swim at Camp Kioloa on the South Coast
(Photo compliments of Mary Kilcline Cody)*

TUCKWELL CAMP

BY CHLOE HARPLEY

Before the life of a Tuckwell Scholar becomes inundated with exams, extra-curriculars and the exuberant world of university, a camp is held at ANU's Kioloa campus. Accompanied by the Tuckwell Fellows, staff, and visited by Graham and Louise, this is an opportunity for Scholars to familiarise themselves with the program and one another, amid the perfect setting of Kioloa's greenery, sea and sand. Structured around themes of the Tuckwell identity, resilience and giving back, the weekend instilled in the first-year cohort a sense of what was expected of us; that is, to make the most of what the program has to offer, whilst simultaneously being bold enough to shape it into what we think it should be.

It was here that we were introduced to a cornerstone of the Scholarship Program – the Tuckwell Enrichment Program – through an inter-cohort Hot Topics session, in which all three years discussed and debated contemporary, contentious issues. As this was the first and only time all sixty-eight Scholars were together in one room, with individual minds and unique perspectives shining light on important topics, it was also the first time that many of the first year cohort realised the value and power of the people we were surrounded by. This continued throughout the weekend as we were inspired – and, at times, intimidated – by the vast knowledge held by later-year Scholars. We participated in sessions focussed on academia and heard about all the ways these Scholars give back to their communities. Importantly, it was also reinforced that we should not place unnecessary pressures on ourselves to achieve to anyone else's standard but, instead, be motivated to be the best we can be as individuals.

Camp was by no means all life-lessons; believe it or not, Scholars are allowed to have fun too. Our nights were filled with arguably overly competitive trivia, and campfire relaxation. The tradition of Tuckwell Fellow, Molly, leading a campfire sing-along was continued as marshmallows were roasted and Scholars got to know each other on a more informal level. Later that night, as the first-year cohort congregated on the moonlit beach of Kioloa, another tradition was born – but we'll keep that one for the history books, and for next year's cohort to carry on.

On our final day, the first year scholars again trekked to the beach where we swam – much to the delight of our coastal members who were longing for sea-salt in their hair. More importantly, we had time to write letters to our Tuckwell Fellows and our future selves, outlining what we wanted to achieve this year. Fortunately, the impact of these letters was far more long-lasting than the sunburn we acquired; they acted as a means of encouragement and reinvigoration when we read them later in the year.

In this way, Tuckwell Camp not only initiated our year in one of the best possible ways, but contributed to friendships both within and across scholar years, and shaped our attitudes towards the program, our studies and university life.

ACADEMIC DINNER

BY NICK WYCHE

Ever since the emotional rollercoaster that was the interview weekend, it's been apparent to me that one of the greatest assets of the Tuckwell program is the diversity of its members. As a body of scholars we run the gamut of backgrounds, talents and interests, and it's always a pleasure to be exposed to such a vibrant and articulate cross-section of the ANU's student community. Every time we come together I'm introduced to new ideas and points of view and, for me, the event that best captures the spirit of this exchange of knowledge is the annual academic dinner.

As we gathered in the foyer of University House, I enjoyed seeing everyone dressed up and looking their best. The space was packed with mingling scholars, staff, mentors and academic invitees who spilled out into the corridor. In some corners friends caught up over a glass of champagne, while in others conversations blossomed between people who had never met before. With the barriers of the classroom removed, we could engage with our fascinating guests with a new level of familiarity.

Eventually we were ushered into the Great Hall for dinner. The imposing setting only served to heighten the gravitas of the evening as we took our seats. I was placed at a table of faces old and new – an economics lecturer, an academic from the School of Law and my own academic mentor. Over a sumptuous meal the discussion covered a wide range of topics, from our experiences at university through to challenges of global significance.

The evening wore on and more bottles of wine were brought out and, unsurprisingly, the conversation turned philosophical. It was a revelation to see students and academics alike applying their fields of expertise to questions which went to the heart of the human experience. I truly believe that everyone at our table was exposed to viewpoints they'd never before considered. As people began to leave, small clusters formed around those who remained, and the night wound down to the sound of these groups talking and laughing like old friends.

The next time I caught up with my academic mentor, we talked about the dinner and he told me how much he'd appreciated the opportunity to get to know such a broad cross-section of the university's community. In an environment where research is so highly specialised, he also doesn't often get the opportunity to engage with academics working outside his discipline.

These are feelings that mirror my own experience – it's hard to stand out to a lecturer you admire when there are four hundred other people in the lecture theatre, and while I love my fields I study, I do sometimes miss the opportunity to learn about a broad range of content. Ultimately this is the greatest advantage that the annual academic dinner offers – the chance for both scholars and their inspirations to solidify the interdisciplinary relationships that make the ANU such a stimulating place to be in.

(Clockwise from upper left: Harry Main, Charlie Guerit, Joseph Dean, Bryce Robinson, Brandon Smith, Nick Wyche, Molly Townes O'Brien, Stephen Tang and Lauren Butterly)

2016 Scholars Charlie Guerit & Chloe Harpley

Photos compliments of Marcus Dahl

INTERVIEW WEEKEND

BY JONATHAN TJANDRA

This year's Interview Weekend was my third one, so trust me when I say they get more and more fun over time. I certainly did not think this would be the case all the way back in 2014. I remember quite vividly my very first impressions of the weekend, including Sam Saunders misspelling my name on my nametag and Jess Woolnough showing me my room on the ground floor of Burton and Garran's D-block.

My favourite part of each Interview Weekend is always meeting new people and listening to their vast arrays of experiences. Marnie Hughes-Warrington, the ANU Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Academic) and a member of the Interview Panel, always says that university is about serendipity. This notion does not reign truer than at Interview Weekend — you never know whom you will meet or the friends you might make as you go through such an intense few days. As the fire that refines gold creates an imperishable metal, so do the trials of the Interview Weekend bind candidates together.

The Weekend could not have run as well as it did without all the work Tim Mansfield, Andrea Murrow, Scholars and staff volunteers put into managing the event, with the words 'Team Tuckwell' emblazoned on the back of their shirts.

One notable hiccup was handled admirably by Team Tuckwell—due to high-speed winds in Melbourne, a group of candidates had their flight cancelled and stayed an extra night at Burton and Garran. Fortunately, they were put on the very next flight at 6 am the next day.

As this is the fourth time the Weekend has been run, traditions have already begun to form organically. From Tuckwell-themed puns on Trivia Night to speed-dating Panel members, the events were run smoothly without any major problems, a testament to the effort of the team.

A particular favourite of the candidates and volunteers alike appeared to be lounging around the Burton and Garran common room while eating mandarins. I look forward to meeting the successful candidates next year.

When I started my time at the ANU, I remember feeling an overwhelming sense of wonder—how could I live up to the reputation of the existing Scholars, as well as the other members of my scholar year? But really, we are just ordinary people given extraordinary opportunities, brought together through the generosity of Graham and Louise Tuckwell. The Interview Weekend was a life-changing experience for all of us, and we are excited to see what new perspectives you will bring to the program.

Program Director Tim Mansfield helps the 75 prospective candidates learn the ropes around the College of Business & Economics, the day before the interviews begin

Administrative Officer Andrea Murrow and scholar volunteers Tom Goodwin and Jonathan Tjandra help ease the nerves of one group of interviewees before they enter the interviews on Day One

FROM A PANEL MEMBER'S PERSPECTIVE

THOUGHTS ON THE INTERVIEW
WEEKEND FROM PANEL MEMBER,
PROFESSOR NARCI TEOH

“What do I say? What shall I wear? Will I fit in?” I steadied my nerves and with a little trepidation, stepped into the sudden hush of The Dining Room at Bruce Hall. It was a cool, wet Friday evening in July and unknown to the prospective scholars there, that I, Narci, novice Selection Panel member for 2016 was as excited and anxious as they all were at the commencement of this year's Tuckwell Interview Weekend. These 4 intense days were akin to running a marathon, a culmination of the preceding 4 months of rigorous and methodical preparation by “Team Tuckwell”: Richard Baker, Tim Mansfield, Andrea Murrow, Liz Lowe and a volunteer student and staff support crew across the ANU, all vitally anchored by the ever-effervescent and tireless Executive, Graham and Louise Tuckwell and our Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Academic) Marnie Hughes-Warrington.

Only 12 months ago, I had the rare opportunity of observing the interview process. One of my roles was to usher students to their interview rooms and help calm frayed nerves before each station. Perhaps as the diminutive “bearer of tissues”, I unintentionally elicited a rather disquieting response: tears flowed, frequently ... from the applicants, not the panel. So it was with some surprise and disbelief when an irresistible invitation arrived from Marnie, Louise and Graham to participate as a Selection Panel member this year. Unknown to the students, the first evening of the Interview Weekend was as much as an induction and orientation for the rookies of the Panel. As instructed, on my first encounter with a student, I asked “Are you a dog or cat person?” which immediately triggered an earnest “Um, I'm allergic. Is this a trick question?” Peals of laughter and puffs of Ventolin inhaler later, everyone recovered and got on with getting to know each other. I was mightily relieved to find that the prospective scholars, all stellar young people were charming, modest and open (not unlike the Selection Panel members).

Not every weekend does one hear the quiet wisdom of Confucius from an Admiral, flutter wildly with gold bullion (in theory) and discover rather tantalisingly how physics and geometry can revolutionise chocolate production in the tropics! The Selection Panel was composed of smart and savvy individuals who were most unassuming and relaxed. We partook in delicious dinners at Scholars House at the end of each interview day to help unwind (thank you, Andrea for the appetizing selections and to the Tuckwell scholars for sharing your space). To add to the dinner mirth and entertainment, every meal was an unfolding revelation by panel members of their absolute menu ‘deal-breakers’ eg. tomatoes in pizza, raw bean sprouts in salads, carrots, pressured-cooked or otherwise, in anything. For a gastroenterologist, this apparent dislike of vegetables though disconcerting was delightfully amusing and reassuringly normal!

On a more serious note, the interviews were as intensive and demanding of the applicants as of the panel members. These interviews tested my skills as a clinician, teacher and researcher. The questions we posed to the students also searched me, intellectually and emotionally. What was personally satisfying was finally meeting the applicants, putting names to faces thereby allowing each panel member to learn more about the prospective scholars, how they felt about their families, their connection with their communities and what their aspirations were for the future.

The subtle backdrop of 'Baker, Mansfield, Murrow and Lowe Events Management Co.' never ceased to amaze me: their professionalism, attention to detail and good humour amidst a constant flurry of activity, incessant text messages, "... and when you have a moment" phone calls, never failed. If this was not enough, to add to the merry mix were complex, maths-defying, multi-paged excel spreadsheets that spewed forth from Tim's trusty printer at Scholars House throughout the weekend. While over the oceans, far north of the equator, statistical analyses were being performed at Mercurial speeds with flawless accuracy. What an organizational and administrative feat this was to pull together; my admiration and congratulations again to all who contributed to the weekend's success!

The 4 days came and went in a flash. The remarkable young people I met in July all shone with seemingly boundless potential. They certainly left their mark on all of us that weekend. To the Selection Panel members, experienced and new, your warmth and kindness to a panel newbie did not go unnoticed and was very much appreciated. Finally, to the incredibly energetic and visionary Tuckwell Executive, Louise, Graham and Marnie, thank you again for the honour and privilege of being part of a truly vibrant and "life-changing" program - you have opened my eyes to the transformative power of philanthropy, to how and what it takes to ensure that the full potential in our young Australians will be realized for generations to come.

THE TUCKWELL ENRICHMENT PROGRAM: BY US, FOR US

BY SACHINI POOGODA

The Tuckwell Enrichment Program (TEP) was conceptualised by members of the 2015 Scholars as a structured version of previously random social and educational events. A program by us, for us. For the 2016 Scholars, this meant college dinners accompanied by a TEP event organised by later years — a weekly comfort in the new and unknown world of university. These ranged from ‘hot topics’ sessions, to lessons on ‘how to Tuck-well’, all of which were designed to facilitate intra and inter-year bonding. As a Scholars House representative I had the pleasure of helping to further refine the program to cater to our year group’s desires in semester two, creating more inter-year events and reforming the notorious ‘hot topics’ sessions to suit us.

HOT TOPICS

Historically ‘Hot Topics’ sessions consisted of verbal discussions of controversial topics over Tim Tams, but, after experiencing a semester of this, the 2016 Scholars decided to try something different. Armed with markers, everyone was let loose on the new whiteboard walls scaling the new Scholars House with one catch — all opinions must be expressed in silence. We found that this structure allowed all voices to be heard without any of the pressure associated with talking aloud. One thing did remain the same however — the blow of losing an argument was, as always, softened by the presence of Tim-Tams!

2016 Cohort of Scholars playing some after-dinner group games at one of their cohort dinners at Burton & Garran Hall

2014 Cohort of Scholars enjoying an exclusive tour of the Celestial Empire exhibition at the National Library of Australia, by the exhibition's curator

SCHOLAR DINNERS

In semester one the 2016 Scholars were kindly hosted by each residence hall for dinner once a week. Not only did this allow us to become familiar with the workings of each residence, it also enabled us to form unequivocal bonds between ourselves. A highlight of these dinners was a three-course meal at Fenner accompanied by a three-course conversation menu. Each course came with a different set of questions to get to know the people across and next to you, making it one of the most meaningful TEP sessions thus far. In second semester we capitalised on these self-catered dinners, having a pizza night at B&G and homemade burgers on the Lena Karmel rooftop. Cooking and eating together was a hugely important part of TEP in 2016, allowing us to remain connected with each other in what was otherwise an extremely busy year.

OPEN EVENTS

One goal of TEP was to facilitate further intercohort interaction. The Scavenger Hunt, Pancake Brunch, Careers Night and the Spring Barbeque were all events that were opened up to all cohorts. Personally these events were my favourites as they allowed us to witness the individuality and intelligence of all Tuckwell Scholars. Our Careers and Pathways event allowed first years to pick the brains of second and third year scholars, satisfying our curiosity of what it was that 'Tuckwell Scholars' actually did around campus. This event in particular made me realise the scope of which our unique interests and talents truly cover — there is definitely a Tuckwell for everything!

AVOIDING BURNOUT WITH BRIAN

A particularly special event held in our second semester was a talk by ANU's Vice-Chancellor, Professor Brian Schmidt, and 2014 Scholar, Matt Jacob. Both speakers talked us through the ups and downs of over-committing, the pressures of achieving, and imposter syndrome. Receiving advice from such a distinguished guest, and a well-respected peer, was a truly valuable experience. Timed just prior to second semester exams, this event reminded some of us and enlightened others to the fact that nobody can achieve one hundred percent of the time. As important as it is to be involved, it is just as important to take a rest.

I have said it once and I will say it a million times, to be surrounded by such a unique and intelligent set of people is an inspiring and privileged position to be in. Every day I discover something new, whether it be about myself or others, and the people around me allow me to open doors I did not even know existed. This year has exceeded my expectations and I am filled with excitement for the years to come.

One of the greatest components of the program this year was the introduction of the Scholars House BBQ. Many an egg-and-bacon roll have already been devoured thanks to this handy cooktop!

2014 Scholar Matt Jacob spoke alongside the VC, Prof Brian Schmidt, at a discussion about avoiding burnout with the 2016 Scholars

MENTOR PROGRAM

1st YEAR

BY CHLOE HARPLEY

First year of university is an undeniably daunting experience and with so many opportunities for things to go wrong both socially and academically, the introduction of a purely student comprised Tuckwell mentoring program was invaluable. Our mentors were able to answer our questions about degrees and courses, the scholarship program and college living, among many others.

Most importantly, they helped us navigate all of the ups and downs by providing first-hand experience and a student perspective. While there is an array of support given by our Tuckwell Fellows, the program staff and even by our halls of residence, the discussions had between third-year mentors and first-year mentees – often over coffee or in Scholars House – were different; simply, they had a lived understanding of exactly what we were going through.

Our mentors' successes and failures guided the decisions we made, and also provided opportunities to participate in extracurriculars, research programs or undertake courses that had been tried and tested. Although being the first year that this type of mentoring has existed within the Tuckwell Program, the first-year cohort is appreciative of the third-years' efforts and its successes are evident in what my cohort has achieved this year.

3rd YEAR

BY JOE DEAN

Mentoring kicked off at the Tuckwell orientation day back in February. Looking back, the day carried a degree of irony. First-years have passion and aspiration often unmatched by their third-year counterparts— don't get me started on the disparity between first year law students and students of any other degree. The fervour of new students debating the implications of a torts problem go above and beyond anything I've ever heard in an admin tutorial... and, yet, I'd been left to hand down my wisdom and sage advice!

Thankfully, Jakub's mysterious sorting hat program matched us all in a way that was conducive to making great first impressions. Being able to connect with someone who shares the rural or city experience was a positive first step in mentor/mentee relationship building.

Mentoring itself worked on an as-needed basis. Generally, this worked out to be a once per term meeting for coffee, food, or a Pâtissez freakshake (never again).

I learnt a lot by reliving first year vicariously through my mentees, recognising mistakes that had been made back then, and offering advice for similar situations. I can only hope that my mentees felt that receiving that information had been as helpful to them.

Overall, the first year of the Tuckwell mentoring program has been a good skeleton that we can flesh out over the coming years. From the mentors' perspective, it has built skills that are highly desirable in the workplace—communication of information to others is a higher-order thinking skill —and strengthened our connection to the whole Tuckwell year group. From the mentees', I imagine it has been very helpful to rely on someone who has been through similar events to offer a dispassionate and objective opinion. I look forward to continuing that formative process with the new first-year Scholars in 2017!

THE TUCKWELL GIFT

The Tuckwell Scholarship was planned to be a distinctive national scholarship program.

There were three key pillars to our thinking.

The first was that the scholarship would identify future leaders from diverse backgrounds from across Australia who might not otherwise have the opportunity to access the type of education ANU offers.

The second was to bring these extraordinary young people together in a university environment where they would interact with each other, be exposed to life experiences different from their own and thereby learn from one another.

Our third pillar was to give the scholars a residential experience away from home, developing leadership skills in a community environment.

Louise and I benefited enormously from our educational experiences. Although we both went to normal state schools our university experiences transformed our lives. I was very fortunate to go to ANU and to live on campus in Bruce Hall.

Yet there were many others who deserved a great university experience but didn't have that same opportunity. Providing greater opportunity to a selection of Australian students to have access to an excellent education is something both Louise and I have always felt strongly about.

We knew we were being ambitious in creating the Tuckwell program. It was created from a standing start. There was no blueprint from which we could draw up our plans. It involved many thousands of hours of hard work from people right across ANU who, like us, believed that we were creating something very special.

Three years on and we are enormously proud of everything that has been achieved. Our Tuckwell Scholars are a wonderfully diverse, passionate and intelligent group of young Australians who constantly inspire us.

Louise and I are both very proud to be expanding the Tuckwell Scholarship Program. We are committed to continuing to build a group of Australia's finest scholars who will go on to fulfill their potential and reinvest their knowledge, skills and experiences in ways that will positively benefit others.

They will have access to Australia's best teachers, live in Australia's finest campus accommodation, have quality pastoral care and be mentored by outstanding staff.

It was a simple choice for us to make ANU the custodian of the Tuckwell Scholarship.

There's no better fit for a national scholarship program than the national university. It has a reputation around the world for providing the best education in Australia and I'm certain that, like me, the Tuckwell Scholars will benefit enormously from the springboard of opportunities that it provides.

2016 GIFT

FROM THE ANU REPORTER

On July 12, 2016, Graham and Louise Tuckwell announced Australia's largest personal philanthropic contribution to a university, worth about $200 million over 30 years, to fund a major expansion of the prized Tuckwell Scholarship Program at The Australian National University (ANU).

The funding will come from two iconic new halls of residence at ANU to be built over the next two years, funded by Graham and Louise Tuckwell at a cost of around $100 million.

The expansion also includes construction of a $10 million Scholars House building, which will be the pastoral, academic and social heart of the Tuckwell Scholarship program.

The collegiate-style residences will each house 400 ANU students in the heart of the campus. The new halls will provide students with one of the world's best experiences of living on-campus. Revenue from the residences will fund the Tuckwell Scholarship Program in perpetuity and will lead to an increase in the number of scholarships offered each year.

ANU Vice-Chancellor Professor Brian Schmidt AC congratulated Graham Tuckwell, an ANU alumnus, and his wife Louise for their magnificent contribution to both ANU and to Australia. He said it will give hundreds of young Australians the opportunity to access an outstanding and transformative education at ANU.

"Today marks a new beginning and a monumental contribution that will be a legacy for many decades to come," Professor Schmidt said. "It is the beginning of a new future at ANU, and a new hallmark in the history of philanthropy in Australia.

"Graham and Louise Tuckwell are a couple who have already been beyond generous. When the Tuckwell Scholarship Program was established in 2013, it was a transformative idea. Over the past three years it has established itself as Australia's most prestigious undergraduate scholarship and Graham and Louise now wish to have it expand and continue in perpetuity.

"The building of two new halls of residence will not only benefit the Scholarship Program but will provide much-needed additional on-campus accommodation. This is an exciting new way in which philanthropists and donors can make a huge positive contribution to tertiary education in this country.

"This is a truly outstanding contribution to the University, and to the nation."

Mr Tuckwell said university education transformed his life and the life of his wife Louise.

"Louise and I benefited enormously from our educational experiences. We would like to help and encourage others to gain from a total university experience and to use it to benefit Australia," Mr Tuckwell said.

"We now want to give more students a chance to take part in the Tuckwell Scholarship Program, and to live in Australia's premier student accommodation."

The new residential halls, heavily inspired by Mr Tuckwell's experience at Bruce Hall, will be designed to set new standards in student accommodation and catering, and will build on the collegiate traditions and experiences of the ANU residential life.

FROM THE PROGRAM DIRECTOR

TIM MANSFIELD

2016 has been a big year for the Tuckwell Scholarship Program and a big year for its inaugural Program Director.

At the beginning of 2016, management of the program moved from the ANU Alumni Relations and Philanthropy (AR&P) Office to a newly created “Tuckwell Scholarship Office”. As part of this change, a new role of Program Director was established, reporting directly to the Head of Scholars House, Professor Richard Baker. Being appointed to this role was the start of a new chapter in my life, both professionally and personally, coinciding with a move into a new house, a new school for my two boys, a new dog for the family - and the end of five and a half intensely rewarding years as Deputy Head of Bruce Hall.

My first encounter with the Tuckwell Scholarship Program was actually at Bruce Hall, when I was invited to attend a dinner on the night of the announcement of the Scholarship’s launch in February 2013. I can recall listening to Graham speak about his and Louise’s inspirational vision for the Scholarship – and remember thinking what a game-changer their generous philanthropic decision would be for the ANU and for the Australian education sector.

Nearly four years later, the ANU is poised to welcome 25 new Scholars to the Program, bringing our Scholar numbers to just over 90. As the Program has grown, so too has its influence on the ANU and the wider tertiary sector; leading the way in terms of educational philanthropy and the idea of looking beyond a student’s ATAR to measure their success and future potential. Four years has also been long enough for Tuckwell Scholars themselves to have an impact on the ANU and the various communities within which they live, work, volunteer, play, educate and create. My experience at Bruce Hall, and since coming into the role of Program Director, has been that Scholars, on the whole, share some common characteristics that make them terrific community builders, contributors and leaders. They:

- Engage and make things happen – and bring others on board to help;
- Listen and are thoughtful;
- Volunteer when others hang back waiting for someone else to step up;
- Can see there is often more than one side to a story; and they
- Accept and value diversity

I see these qualities as being manifestations of the Tuckwell Attributes, and qualities which are valuable in building healthy, thriving communities.

Administratively, the Program has benefited greatly over its first four years from the leadership provided by Dr Colin Taylor, Director of the Alumni Relations and Philanthropy Office, and the financial and operational oversight, planning, coordination, and support from many others in the AR&P team past and present, including (but certainly not limited to) Ms Karen Holt, Ms Steph Neulinger, Mrs Janice Caruthers, Ms Louise Adena and Mr Ashish Doshi.

Tim Mansfield, Program Director

Andrea Murrow, Administrative Officer

Our new organisational structure this year, and our co-location of our office with Scholars in the new Scholars House building in May, has allowed for more efficient lines of communication and the opportunity to build on the outstanding work of staff in AR&P in establishing the Program.

Some other new developments in 2016 that are worth celebrating as we come to the end of a busy year include:

- The appointment of a Tuckwell Scholarship Administration Officer, Andrea Murrow. Andrea has brought a range of outstanding artistic and administrative skills to the role and has used these to shape aspects of the program in an exciting way;
- The Chime, our weekly newsletter to Scholars, which began at the beginning of this year, has been a handy vehicle by which to keep Scholars up to date with Program developments and activities, as well as let them know what's happening in and about campus. Andrea assumed prime responsibility for The Chime when she came on board, and we know that Scholars greatly appreciate the thoughtfulness and humour that goes into its creation each week.
- In late May, the new Scholars House was officially opened. Guests to Scholars House who knew the old Peppercorn Café or Caterina's Café have commented how the place is virtually unrecognisable. It's been great for Scholars to have a "home" on campus that is central and suitable for a range of uses – from quiet(ish!) study during the day to official Scholars House events in the evenings.

- The successful completion of the 2016 "Interview Weekend" in which a team of Scholars Volunteers helped us newbies pull off an important yet logistically complex selection weekend at ANU.
- Behind the scenes, our office has also worked with Graham and Louise on a new range of marketing materials due for release in 2017, as well as the development and updating of a range of documents that underpin the program, including the Scholars' Handbook and next year's Conditions of Award.

This year has been a busy one, and both Andrea and I hope that as we reach more familiar territory with the Program - having had a year in the role - that we will have even further scope to put our energies into working with Graham, Louise, Richard and the Fellows in improving and enhancing the Tuckwell experience for our Scholars.

CONTACT US

For further information about the Tuckwell Scholarship, including eligibility criteria and application dates visit our website at <http://tuckwell.anu.edu.au> or email us at tuckwell@anu.edu.au

Tuckwell Scholars House
Building 3L, Fellows Lane
The Australian National University, Acton 2601
02 6125 9411